Discover the archaeological remains of one of the most important cultural centres of Jewish life in Europe on a guided tour around the very recently redesigned museum. In 1460 Frankfurt’s town council decided the Jewish population should be resettled in a segregated area on the edge of the town - the Judengasse. This new quarter was the first Jewish ghetto in Europe (1462-1796) and turned Frankfurt into the most important Jewish centre of the German Empire, praised for its rich cultural life and scholarship. The exhibition opens up new perspectives on Frankfurt’s extraordinary Jewish legacy.
