Afropessimism
A Reading & Conversation with Frank B. Wildersons III

Frank B. Wilderson’s 2020 book Afropessimism has generated a fervent debate about the lasting presence of slavery and the centrality of anti-Black violence for the project of modernity. Wilderson’s melange of memoir, philosophy, and poetic reflection has instantly become a reference point in a branch of critical theory that interprets the tenacity of anti-Black racism as a sign that the subjugation of Black people organizes Western civilization. Nominated for the National Book Award in Nonfiction, Afropessimism is provocative in the best sense. As Claudia Rankine puts it: “There are crucial books that you don’t agree with, but one still comes to understand the importance of the thought experiment. Afropessimism is one of those books.”

Frank B. Wilderson will read excerpts from Afropessimism and engage in a conversation with his German translator, Jan Wilm. The event will conclude with a Q&A-session with the audience.

A transdisciplinary lecture series by the departments of American Studies, English Studies, and Anglophone Literatures and Cultures intransition.uni-frankfurt.de