Trainer and coach in scientific writing skills. Philipp Mayer has extensive experience in research and in adult education.

Objective

- Understanding structural patterns and quality criteria of review papers
- Approaching review-writing with pragmatism and efficiency

Description

Review papers synthesize the literature of a particular topic. Writing review papers is challenging because various findings and ideas have to be categorised and connected.

This distance learning workshop covers:

- Narrative reviews versus systematic reviews
- Structure of reviews: storyline, sections, paragraphs
- Text quality of reviews: quality criteria and checklists
- Writing a review: steps to consider
- Writing a review: helpful software tools
- Publishing reviews: journals, time-frames, co-operations

Methodology

- This online workshop consists of a 1:1 coaching session (with Skype or phone, 20 minutes) and various self-learning units. The dates for the individual appointment are scheduled in advance via Doodle.
- Participants learn from a screencast and a slide presentation. In addition, they watch videos, explore checklists, discover helpful websites and software tools.
- Every participant develops a detailed outline for his or her review article and receives constructive feedback in the coaching session.

Conditions

Please choose in advance the research question you would like to tackle in your review paper.
